tiag® Contract Win for Operation Supplement Safety Initiative
Intensifies Department of Defense Focus on Total Force Fitness and Human Performance

RESTON, Va., October 12, 2018 – Advancing the military's focus on total force fitness and human performance, tiag® has won a year-long prime contract to provide software development expertise and user experience design for the Operation Supplement Safety (OPSS) initiative — a Department of Defense (DoD) dietary supplement resource for the military community, along with leaders, healthcare providers and DoD civilians.

Supporting the Consortium for Health and Military Performance (CHAMP) at the Uniformed Services University of the Health Sciences (USU), tiag — an innovative technology services firm and systems integrator esteemed for unique approaches, synergistic processes and transformational solutions — will leverage its agile development team of Drupal developers, UI/UX design experts, testers, graphic designers and project managers to improve and maintain the OPSS website.

"To ensure smooth delivery, team tiag will adhere to our company's stringent technical approaches to software development," says tiag Executive Director Arthur "Charlie" Doutt. "To drive traffic to the site and expand CHAMP's sphere of influence within the DoD, tiag is creating an entirely new design with innovative features and functions, incorporating an agile approach and best practices in user-centered design, coding and testing."

In addition to leveraging tiag's existing UX/UI team comprising a project manager, software developer, interface designer, UX strategist, senior UX designer, and quality insurance specialist, this new contract onboards one new tiag employee as Drupal developer.

Doutt notes that upon project completion, OPSS will have a completely new look that quickly captures user interest in a more concise manner.
